GIFTS FOR GROWING BABIES AND TODDLERS

Small furniture items like potty chairs, activity seats, and closet organizers are excellent items for your growing child.

Potty Chairs

When your child is developmentally ready to become potty trained you may want to look for a potty chair that will encourage your child to use it. Friendly characters can help attract a child to use the potty and fun electronics are helpful in reaffirming a toddler he is doing a good thing using his potty chair. There can be a variety of features including a removable seat that you can place on adult toilets and a step stool so children can reach the sink to wash their hands and brush their teeth! Some potty chairs will come with rewarding stickers and booklets to help you chart your toddler's progress and keep him encouraged to continue his potty training success.

For many children, learning to use the potty can be a frightful transition out of diapers. The time for your child to start potty training is relative to development and readiness. Encourage communication from the child to tell you when he has to use the potty. Walk them through the process gently and before you know it, your little one will be asking for some privacy.

Activity Seats

An excellent gift for your toddler is a just-the-right-size chair. Look for activity chairs that offer a variety of features for your child to keep them entertained! Storage space that will keep toys, books, crayons, and puzzles at child's reach encourages independence and reminds children to clean up their space afterwards.

Closet Organizers

Every child's room is filled with clothing, toys, shoes, and diapers that require some strategic spacing. Keep the nursery organized with closet organizers that maximize space in a child's closet and keeps stacks of diapers handy. A closet organizer that utilizes the space under a child's hanging clothes is a practical design.
